

International Agreements signed but not ratified by Ireland

Entering into an international agreement by Ireland normally involves a two-step process; the State will first sign an international agreement, subject to ratification, and ratification will follow at a later stage. This interval between signature and ratification permits the State, through the responsible line Department, to take whatever legislative or administrative measures are required to fulfil the obligations assumed under the agreement. The length of time between signature and ratification may, therefore, depend on the complexities of the particular issues involved.

All international agreements to which Ireland becomes a party are laid before Dáil Éireann as required by Article 29.5.1 of the Constitution and as a matter of best practice in the interests of transparency this includes agreements of a technical and administrative character. The Irish Treaty Series is published by the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade on its website (<https://www.dfa.ie/our-role-policies/international-priorities/international-law/find-a-treaty/>) and can be consulted for information on international agreements to which the State is a party.

The following international agreements have been signed but not yet ratified by Ireland, as of 27 March 2018.
